

Binsted route most damaging

Last week a friend and I visited Binsted Woods. We were following Richard Williamson's walk of March 2007.

After parking by the church famous for its 12th century paintings and Norman font we walked towards the largest and most ancient broad-leaved woodland remaining on the Sussex coastal plain.

On the way we were delighted to meet local volunteers who were laying a hedge in the traditional manner and discussed with them the measures that were being taken to protect the habitat and preserve its history and wildlife from waymarks to dormice.

Of the three bypass options for Arundel there is no doubt that a route through Binsted would be the most damaging.

I would urge all those interested and especially those involved in making the decision to go and see for themselves. Perhaps you could reprint Richard's walk from 29th March, 2007?

ANNE SIMMONDS

Nyton Road
Westergate

Time to put people first

The inevitability of losing a road width section of Centurion Way for the Southern Access Road is